

Stewardship of Creation

| | |
|--|----|
| Introduction to Being Reformed: Faith Seeking Understanding | 3 |
| To the Leader | 4 |
| Session 1. Creation Care | 5 |
| Session 2. Caring for the Environment and Caring for People..... | 9 |
| Session 3. Being Green at Home..... | 13 |
| Session 4. Being Green at Church..... | 18 |
| Session 5. Being Green in the World..... | 22 |
| Session 6. Reconciling Humans and Creation..... | 25 |

Writer: Boyd Lien

Published by CMP, a ministry of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Louisville, Kentucky.

Unless otherwise indicated, Scripture quotations in this publication are from the New Revised Standard Version (NRSV) of the Bible, © 1989 by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and are used by permission. In some instances, adaptations have been made to a Scripture or a confession to make the language inclusive.

Every effort has been made to trace copyrights on the materials included here. If any copyrighted material has nevertheless been included without permission and due acknowledgment, proper credit will be inserted in future printings once notice has been received.

© 2010 CMP, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, Louisville, KY. All rights reserved. Except where permission to photocopy is expressly granted on the material, no part of these materials may be reproduced without permission from the publisher.

Printed in the U.S.A.

Meet the Writer

Boyd Lien, an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), recently retired from Reid Memorial Presbyterian Church in Augusta, Georgia. Boyd has served as pastor and educator with congregations in Verona, New Jersey; New Castle, Pennsylvania; Eugene, Oregon; Houston, Texas; Richmond, Virginia; and Augusta, Georgia. As a church educator, he has pursued his passion to share the good news by creating and publishing a wide variety of educational resources through Abingdon Press, The Logos Program, and The Kerygma Program. As an artist, he has designed logos, illustrations, and brochures for individuals, congregations, and the denomination. Most recently, he is the author of the revised Resource Book and Leader's Guide for Kerygma's Discovering the Bible: A New Generation.

Introduction to Being Reformed: Faith Seeking Understanding

Reformed and Presbyterian Christians are people of faith who are seeking understanding. From the beginnings of our Reformed tradition, Presbyterians have realized God calls us to explore ways the Christian faith can be more fully known and expressed. This vision has driven concerns for the education of people of all ages. Presbyterians have been big on providing resources to help us delve more deeply into Christian faith and the theology that gives our living tradition its distinctive heritage.

This Being Reformed curriculum for adults is one expression of the desire to open up what it means to be Presbyterian Christians in the world today. Our purpose is to enhance, enrich, and expand our insights. We want Presbyterians to grow in understandings of elements that are foundational and significant for their faith. Encounters with theology, church, worship, spirituality/discipleship, and social righteousness will guide our ways.

These studies engage our whole selves. We will find our minds moved by new ideas, our emotions stirred with responses of gratitude, and calls for action that can lead us in different life directions. Heads, hearts, and hands will be drawn into the joys of discovering what new things God is calling us toward.

We invite you to join this journey of faith seeking understanding. Celebrate the blessings of our Reformed and Presbyterian tradition of faith. Be stimulated and challenged by fresh insights that will deepen your understandings. Find a stronger commitment to the God who has loved us in Jesus Christ.

To the Leader

The authors of Being Reformed: Faith Seeking Understanding emphasize essential Reformed theological principles that relate to our lives of faith. These sessions will help you lead a group into the theology and thoughts inspired by the challenging and interesting articles in the participant's book.

You might choose simply to begin the session with the prayer that precedes each session in the participant's book, then reading through the articles together, stopping when you or a student wishes to comment or raise a question. You could then close the session by discussing the questions at the end of the session and encouraging the group members to do the spiritual practice.

Unfortunately, that style of leading does not meet the needs of every kind of learner. The session plans encourage group leaders to try some new things to light up the hearts and minds of more people. Most teachers teach the way they like to learn. Choosing one new activity during each session will stretch you and open a door to someone who learns differently than you. Over the weeks, you will notice what your group enjoys and what they are unwilling to do. Let that, rather than your preferences, be your guide as you prepare to lead.

These session plans are designed to encourage group participation. Discussion and sharing create community and provide practice that all of us need in expressing our faith and wrestling with our questions. When asking questions, get comfortable with some silence while group members contemplate a response. Resist the urge to fill up the silence with your words.

If your group members like to talk, you might not be able to ask every suggested question. Also it will make a difference in your group session if group members have read the articles prior to the session. If you find it necessary to read from the participant's book during the group session, choose the passages that convey the core ideas.

You are more than a dispenser of information. In your role as group leader, you cooperate with God in the formation of faith and in the transformation of lives. You are the lead learner, modeling a way that faith seeks understanding. You are not trying to cover a lesson, but to uncover truth. Pray for yourself and your group members, prepare your session, relax, and enjoy!

May God bless your faithfulness!

Creation Care

Scripture

Genesis 1:26–27; 1 Corinthians 4:2; Psalm 24:1; Hosea 4:1–3, 6; Romans 8:19–21

Main Idea

Caring for God’s creation has become a priority for Presbyterians along with many other people of faith. The common bond uniting the growing creation care movement is a commitment to responsible stewardship. The Genesis injunction to “have dominion” is best understood as caring for, rather than exploiting, all that God has created and is creating.

Teaching Points

This session invites learners to consider:

1. Characteristics of what it means to be a green Presbyterian.
2. Definitions of green words and terms as well as the biblical understanding of having dominion.
3. Benefits of the broad-based creation care movement.

Resources Needed

Bibles
Participant’s book
News articles related to being green

Leader Prep

As you prepare for this session, anticipate those who will be a part of the class. There may be those who know little about the subject as well as those who are already committed to being green. No doubt, many, along with Kermit, confess, “It’s not easy being green.” Some will have read the participant’s book; others may just have glanced at it. There will be those who learn in a variety of ways and will need more than mouth-to-ear. This leader’s guide provides a variety of approaches to learning.

Since this session serves as an introduction to the following five sessions, it will be helpful to define some of the words and terminology. Consider posting the terms and definitions around the teaching space.

Many of the terms used are recent creations. For instance, carbon-neutral was the New Oxford American Dictionary's Word of the Year in 2006. Carbon footprint has been in use for the past ten years, superseding an earlier term, environmental footprint, which is still in use. The definition from Wikipedia.com states, "A 'carbon footprint' measures the greenhouse gas emissions caused directly and indirectly by a person, organization, event or product."

You may want to do an Internet search for creation care to gain an insight into the scope of this growing movement. The links will provide a glimpse of some individuals and faith communities within the movement. Seek to discover an existing faith-based coalition at work in your community to share with the group.

For this session, you will need to gather five to ten articles from the print and electronic media related to environmental issues and concerns. Check your local newspaper, news magazines, and the Internet for stories, anecdotes, headlines, and blogs related to being green.

Involve the participants by sharing in the readings of the Scriptures, quotations, and prayers. For the opening prayer, you may choose to pray Dr. Brinton's prayer in the participant's book. It can be offered either in unison or by a group member.

Leading the Session

Gather

- Welcome the participants, encourage introductions, and open with prayer.
- Briefly introduce the scope of the course by reviewing the upcoming sessions in the participant's book.
- Dr. Brinton writes: "So what could it mean to be a 'green Presbyterian'? We begin with creation care, the application of the biblical principle of stewardship to the environment we share with all living things." Ask: What do the terms being green and green Presbyterian mean to you?

Head

- In addition to being green, the terms creation care, carbon footprint, and carbon neutral are ones we will be using. Ask the group members to respond with their understandings of these terms and then share the definitions you found.
- Read Genesis 1:26–27. Dominion is another word in need of definition. Ask: What comes to mind when you hear the word dominion?
- Share a few other translations of the original Hebrew word that is translated as dominion:
 - “masters”—The New Jerusalem Bible
 - “rule over”—New International Version, Contemporary English Version
 - “be responsible”—The Message
- Dr. Brinton suggests that the word dominion is better understood as caregiving and directs us in the New Testament to a similar call to be God’s stewards. Read and discuss 1 Corinthians 4:2.

Heart

- Read Psalm 24:1. “The earth is the LORD’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it.” We are hearing from a green psalmist!
- Distribute the news articles relating to environmental concerns that you gathered. Later in this course (p. 37 in the participant’s book), Dr. Brinton mentions Karl Barth’s admonition for Christians to read the Bible in one hand while the newspaper is in the other. If he were making that statement today, he would certainly add having our computer or smart phone in the other hand!
- Invite the group members to report briefly on the environmental concern in their article. After each person shares, lead the entire group in responding together: “The earth is the LORD’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it.”

Hands

- Ask: How are we to respond to the environmental concerns that have been shared from the news articles? What are we called to do?
- Dr. Brinton writes, “The prophet Hosea makes a connection between human sinfulness and the fate of the environment.” Read Hosea 4:1–3, 6. Hosea proclaims that the knowledge of the Lord, faithfulness, and loyalty are needed for healing and renewal.
- Share that we are compelled to be green Presbyterians because of our knowledge of God as Creator, Redeemer, and Sustainer, and our desire to be faithful and loyal. Read the following selection from A Brief Statement of Faith:

We trust in God, whom Jesus called Abba, Father. In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community. But we rebel against God; we hide from our Creator. Ignoring God’s commandments, we violate the image of God in others and ourselves, accept lies as truth, exploit neighbor and nature, and threaten death to the planet entrusted to our care. We deserve God’s condemnation. Yet God acts with justice and mercy to redeem creation.
- Ask: In what ways are you currently being a green Presbyterian? Invite the group members to share their current green actions. What commitments have they made? What challenges are they facing?
- Ask: In what ways is our church practicing being green? What are your hopes for being green in the future?

Depart

- Read Romans 8:19–21. Read in unison Dr. Brinton’s words on page 8: “Paul believes the whole creation—plants, animals, birds, fish—has a part to play in God’s drama of salvation. Jesus has come to save the human race, and now the ‘children of God’ will play a role in rescuing creation and enjoying a new era of healing, peace, and justice. In this restoration, humans will return to their role as good stewards of God’s creation, and the world will become a more fruitful and healthy place.”
- Close the session in prayer.

Stewardship of Creation

| | |
|--|----|
| Introduction to Being Reformed: Faith Seeking Understanding | 3 |
| Introduction to Stewardship of Creation | 4 |
| Session 1. Creation Care | 5 |
| Session 2. Caring for the Environment and Caring for People | 12 |
| Session 3. Being Green at Home | 18 |
| Session 4. Being Green at Church | 24 |
| Session 5. Being Green in the World | 31 |
| Session 6. Reconciling Humans and Creation | 38 |
| Suggestions for Further Study | 44 |

Creation Care

Scripture

Genesis 1:26 God’s decision to let humans “have dominion” over the creatures of the earth.

John 1:1–3 The preexistent Word of God played a role in the creation of the world.

Prayer

God our Maker, you were acting in love when you created this world and everything in it. Along with our Reformed ancestor John Calvin, we believe every blade of grass and every color in the rainbow is intended to make us rejoice. May we recognize this joy. We thank you for giving us dominion over a beautiful, vibrant, vital, and valuable world. Help us to care for your creation in all its various forms. May we be good stewards of the resources you have entrusted to us. We pray in the name of Jesus, your Word made flesh. Amen.

Introduction

For centuries, Christians thought little about their responsibility for caring for the planet God created for them and the other creatures of the world. The biblical command to “have dominion” over the earth (Genesis 1:26, 28) was seen as a divine endorsement of environmental exploitation, and Christians wasted natural resources while polluting the air, water, and land. A shift has occurred in recent years. We now begin to see that we “threaten death to the planet entrusted to our care.”¹ The good news is many people of faith now support efforts to be good stewards of natural resources. The Pew Forum’s Religious Landscape Survey (February 2008) showed widespread support for stricter environmental laws and regulations among Jews (77 percent), Buddhists (75 percent), Muslims (69 percent), and Hindus (67 percent), as well as members of mainline churches (64 percent), Catholic churches (60 percent), and evangelical churches (54 percent).

1. Book of Confessions, 10.3.

So what could it mean to be a “green Presbyterian”? We begin with creation care, the application of the biblical principle of stewardship to the environment we share with all living things. Caring for God’s creation has become a priority among religious people concerned about the earth, and there has been an explosion of environmental activity at the grassroots level. “We now have five thousand congregations that are responding to climate change by cutting carbon emissions in many different ways,” says Gretchen Killion of Interfaith Power and Light, a San Francisco-based group active in twenty-nine states that helps churches and religious organizations lower their energy consumption. She says, “Many of our members have installed solar panels and three or four even have geothermal” energy.

This broad-based, interfaith movement has practical benefits and can draw together people of diverse theologies. Roman Catholics and Native Americans are working together to preserve land and water, Muslims are making links between urban communities and sustainable farms, and Protestant churches are joining interfaith coalitions and taking steps to “green” their congregations by modifying their buildings, installing compact fluorescent lamps, using programmable thermostats, recycling paper, practicing conservation landscaping, and purchasing organic, fair-trade coffee—all of which are ways to be good stewards of God-given resources.

Hebrew Roots

The scriptural roots of this broad-based movement are found in the Hebrew Bible. Genesis 1:26 tells us God said, “Let us make humankind in our image, according to our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the wild animals of the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps upon the earth.” God’s decision to let humans “have dominion” over the creatures of the earth has traditionally been interpreted as permission to exploit natural resources. However, the wording is better understood in terms of caregiving. Since humans are made in God’s image, they are to treat nonhuman creatures as God treats humans, with love and respect. God has loving, respectful dominion over us, and this becomes the model for our loving, respectful dominion over the planet entrusted to our care.

In a powerful affirmation of the reign of God over all of creation, Psalm 24:1–2 says, “The earth is the LORD’s and all that is in it, the world, and those who live in it; for he has founded it on the seas, and established it on the rivers.” The whole world belongs to God, including all people, because God has created everything. The fact God has founded it on the “seas” and the “rivers” is a reminder that God brought order out of chaos when “a wind from God swept over the face of the waters” on the first day of creation (Genesis 1:2). We affirm “the earth is the LORD’s” every time we work together to preserve land and water, make links between urban communities and sustainable farms, and take steps to “green” our congregations. We join God in bringing order out of chaos when we practice the three R’s of waste management: reduce, reuse, recycle. In so doing, we act as better caretakers of the precious resources that have been made available to us.

The prophet Hosea makes a connection between human sinfulness and the fate of the environment when he says, “Hear the word of the LORD, O people of Israel; for the LORD has an indictment against the inhabitants of the land. There is no faithfulness or loyalty, and no knowledge of God in the land. Swearing, lying, and murder, and stealing and adultery break out; bloodshed follows bloodshed. Therefore the land mourns, and all who live in it languish; together with the wild animals and the birds of the air, even the fish of the sea are perishing My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge” (Hosea 4:1–3, 6). The prophet makes clear that human wickedness—swearing, lying, murder, stealing, and adultery (v. 2)—pollute nature and all the creatures that dwell in it. Because of human sin, the land mourns (the Hebrew word can also be translated “dries up”) and the wild animals, birds, and fish die away (v. 3). There is a strong connection between human activity and the fate of the natural world.

There is a strong connection between human activity and the fate of the natural world.

Christian Fruits

The challenge to care for creation continues in the New Testament. John begins with words that link the Word of God to the created order: “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God. All things came into being through him, and without him not one thing came into being” (John 1:1–3). The preexistent Word of God played a critical role in the creation of the world and then “became flesh and lived among us” as Jesus of Nazareth (John 1:14). His life was marked by “grace and truth,” with love and care for all people.

Lyndsay Moseley of the Sierra Club became aware of the link between faith and the environment when she encountered a low-income community outside Knoxville, Tennessee, whose drinking water had been contaminated by the illegal dumping of lead, arsenic, diesel fuel, and PCBs. She joined a coalition that demanded clean water for the neighborhood, and, in the course of that successful effort, she “began to understand that God’s call to care for creation is the same as God’s call to love our neighbors.”² Being a green Presbyterian is one of the ways we can follow Christ’s call to love our neighbors as ourselves.

Being a green Presbyterian is one of the ways we can follow Christ's call to love our neighbors as ourselves.

The New Testament also contains stories about slaves and stewards, people who have been given responsibility to care for the property of their master. “It is required of stewards that they should be found trustworthy” (1 Corinthians 4:2), says Paul. Throughout the Gospels, Jesus speaks positively of slaves who are “faithful and wise” (Matthew 24:45), “trustworthy” (Matthew 25:21), and at work when their master arrives (Luke 12:43). In all these cases, slaves and stewards are not owners of property themselves, but are caring for the land and resources of their master. So too we are challenged to be faithful, wise, trustworthy, and hardworking stewards of the wonderfully fruitful earth that God has entrusted to our care.

Finally, Paul writes, “For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the children of God; for the creation was subjected to futility, not of its own will but by the will of the one who subjected it, in hope that the creation itself will be set free from its bondage to decay and will obtain the freedom of the glory of the children of God” (Romans 8:19–21). Paul believes the whole creation—plants, animals, birds, fish—has a part to play in God’s drama of salvation. Jesus has come to save the human race, and now the “children of God” will play a role in rescuing creation and enjoying a new era of healing, peace, and justice. In this restoration, humans will return to their role as good stewards of God’s creation, and the world will become a more fruitful and healthy place.

2. Lyndsay Moseley, ed., Holy Ground: A Gathering of Voices on Caring for Creation (San Francisco: Sierra Club Books, 2008), p. 11.

Churches can be both faithful and green by taking actions rooted in God's mandate to care for creation.

Faith Communities and the Environmental Movement

The greening of religion, though long overdue, is really quite natural. More surprising is that secular environmental groups are now reaching out to faith communities. A Sierra Club report highlights faith-based environmental initiatives in all fifty states, "spiritually motivated grassroots efforts to protect the planet." One line is particularly striking: "Lasting social change rarely takes place without the active engagement of communities of faith." Think of the civil rights movement in the United States, Solidarity in Poland, and the anti-Apartheid movement in South Africa. Social change does not stick without the glue of religion.

We've reached a critical point when the secular environmental movement needs the involvement of the faith community if it is going to succeed nationally and internationally. This partnership could be the next step in the expansion of creation care and the growth of green spirituality. But are religious people ready to enter into this marriage? The responses are mixed. Moseley has been working since 2005 to develop partnerships with people who have spiritual reasons for protecting the planet. Coming out of a deeply religious and politically conservative home in Tennessee, she is eager to build strong relationships between the Sierra Club and people of faith, based on trust, intersecting values, and a willingness to work together.

Nevertheless, not everyone sees the coming together of religious communities and secular environmental groups as a marriage made in heaven. It will take time for evangelicals to overcome their suspicion and distrust of environmentalists, although there is clear movement in this direction. Jack Graham, a former president of the Southern Baptist Convention, is unsure about the main causes of global warming, but he strongly believes that Christians should not abuse the earth. He recently led his 7,000-member Texas church through an energy audit that led to changes in its consumption, resulting in savings of $1.1 million.

Other faith groups want to make sure their distinctive mission is not diluted by environmental partnerships. "We hear regularly from secular groups who want to partner with us," says Killion. "These groups have important information to share, and we need it to do our work. However, we strive to be theologically based and not to be an environmental organization.” Killion wants the message of Interfaith Power and Light to remain faith-based, rooted in the mandate to care for creation found in most mainstream religions.³

The greening of religious communities is a positive development on the spiritual landscape. It is understandable that secular environmental groups would try to enlist these new converts to save the planet. However, Christians and other people of faith are deeply rooted in their religious traditions, and they are understandably

The greening of religious communities is a positive development on the spiritual landscape.

wary about any mixed marriage that threatens to dilute their beliefs. It is certainly good that environmental groups have found religion, but they will have to be patient as they court the affections of “green” Presbyterians and other believers who are committed to caring for God’s creation.

Spiritual Practice

Embark on a forty-day “carbon fast,” to reduce your personal carbon footprint. Include removing a light bulb at home, turning off computers and televisions at night, and eliminating unnecessary short car trips. Daily, give thanks for what you have been given, and pray for guidance to be a wise steward of your resources.

3. Henry G. Brinton, “Green, meet God,” USA Today, November 10, 2008, p. 11A.

Questions for Reflection

What does it mean to be good stewards of natural resources, and how can stewardship of the earth be practiced in communities of faith? What kind of environmental activity is appropriate for congregations?

“Creation care” is a broad-based, interfaith movement that has practical benefits and can draw together people of diverse theologies. Where do you see possibilities for connections? How does care for God’s creation intersect with love of neighbor?

Where do communities of faith and secular environmental groups have intersecting values? Are there dangers in Presbyterians becoming green?

According to a Sierra Club report, “Lasting social change rarely takes place without the active engagement of communities of faith.” How does the glue of religion make social change stick?