

CROSS BORDERS

Each map is an artist's rendition of an area and shows an approximation of the location of places during biblical times. Many locations are still there today.

What borders do you or others have to cross where you live? . . . Throughout time, the people of God have gone into new lands by choice, by circumstance, and because of tragedy. Can you name some of these places? . . .

How have borders between people and places changed over time? . . .

How might they have changed people's lives? . . .

How might these borders have been decided? How might they have changed people's lives? . . .

Look at the borders of any contemporary map. How might these borders have been decided? How might they have changed people's lives? . . .

Other than geographic, what types of borders do you need to cross to reach people who are different from you? . . .

What are cultural, linguistic, and social borders? . . .
